Last Monday at Summit station, between Luning and Ione, while Ed. Merten was chaining two wagons together, the brake on one was thrown off too soon and the man was caught between the two wagons and badly squeezed about the hips. Horses had to be hitched to one of the wagons before they could be drawn apart, when Merten fell to the ground unconscious. He was taken to Hawthorne yesterday for medical treatment.

The Salt Lake Tribune, in speaking of the preposterous ideas of the east on the silver question, says: "If an earthquake should throw the Rocky mountains perpendicular a mile high, and cut off all communications with the east, the west would do pretty well all the same, and if that rampart could be kept perpendicular in place for all time to come, the west would be exceedingly rich in twenty years, and by that time the east would be perfectly willing to accept silver money at par, at a rate of 16 to 1 of gold. The west is all right, just as the east would be if it would shake off some of its perverse ideas and accept the blessing which a merciful providence has hidden away under the surface of the desert and barren hills of the west."

QUIET AT BUCKEYE.

A Miner Gives More Information Regarding the Trouble.

Peace and quiet reigns at Buckeye once more, although the flag waves from the cabin as if seeking to dispel the air of solitude and desolation. This flag played an important part in the noted Buckeye affair of the 30th ult., it being hoisted—not on the day of battle, but the next day, upon the advent of the Sheriff into the camp.

It appears that after the evacuation by the Raycraft forces, it was deemed necessary to prepare for a regular siege, in case of a return of the combatants who had threatened to come back fully reinforced.

The prominent peaks were being patrolled by sentries, when instead of an advancing army, the burly form of the Sheriff of Douglas county came into view. Then it was, after a short parley, that the notable red flag was run up, and although so suggestive generally of anarchy and riot, in this case meant peace. It heralded to the sentries on the hills, the fact that no one was coming, but instead, the arm of the law before mentioned.

It told the boys, that although parties had promised the Raycrafts twenty fighters in times of peace, that they had changed their tactics in time of war.

It told the miners working in the gulches, that the shot-gun line of arguments would be abandoned and that of a legal nature commenced, but it did not tell the fact that criminal prosecutions were being pushed rather than the proper civil suits to quiet titles.

But it made no difference to the victorious army just what the result would be, it simply said "Boys come into camp," and they came.

The genial Sheriff took in the situation besides all the Raycraft guns, then he started for Genoa followed by the army—victors the day before—defeated the next, by the simple fluttering of a piece of paper.

But the red flag still waves—and will continue until the Summer's sun makes the west window of the cabin too hot for comfort. Then down comes flag and up goes the curtain, the only luxury of the sort in the camp.

The cessation of all work in Buckeye is due to the fact of a blanket injunction having been issued out of District Court of Ormsby county which shuts down every sluice box within six miles of the property in dispute. Parties are enjoined from using any of the water of the Buckeye creek, and as not one tenth of these waters pass through the disputed ground or ditches, miners away below are thus debarred from an attempt to support their families, but must stand helplessly by and see the water going to waste and through no fault of theirs is this state of affairs.

There will be no attempt to disobey the mandate of his Honor, the District Judge, nor will there probably be any effort to ask a modification of the restraining order, for these men are largely without means and it takes lawyers to reach the judicial ear. The suits will drag along and some day be decided satisfactory perhaps, but in the meantime, the waters, although enjoined from man's use, are fast going to waste, along with the rapidly disappearing mountain snows, so that by the time the waters may be used by the needy, there will be none for use.

Hard as this may seem, it is only in keeping with the hog law that has been in force in Buckeye from the very start, only just now having been broken down by the uprising of the miners, on the 30th.

The whole country cannot be held by a few men, as has been attempted provided miners assert their rights, and the scope of mining ground lying between the Winters mine on the South and the Como District on the North, is susceptible of supporting a thousand men when developed, rather than a dozen who have thrown every obstacle in the way of locating and working that section heretofore.

A great deal of sympathy has been created since the so called Buckeye fight, over the story of two men being compelled to walk out of camp to Carson.

This is best met by the foreman of the Smith ranch, 1½ miles below, who says: "I told them they were perfectly welcome to stay over night or until a team could be procured to take them home; also that in the morning I was sure they could get a team one-half a mile below us, to take them in, but they acted as if they didn't want to stay and wouldn't."

The fact is, (and there are two witnesses who heard the expression): "We will go to Carson tonight some how, and tomorrow will be back with a crowd and paralyze the —"

That is the exact, and only reason for the Carson hustle. Reinforcements had been promised if needed to hold claims unlawfully against rightful owners, and two men started for them, but failed in their errand. Buckeye may be quiet, but the men there are awake and propose to stay.
